

Black Male Summit II

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 2020

Community College of Denver's Black Male Summit is an initiative focused on increasing the enrollment and retention of African American students.

Nationally as well as locally, the college-going rates of African American males lag far behind their white classmates. Yet, to succeed in today's changing economy, 75 percent of all jobs require some level of education and training beyond high school. Denver employers face this realization every day as they look for employees with the skills and the credentials needed for their workforce.

The Summit provides inspiring role models and practical workshops for both students and their parents to encourage them to consider the possibilities and pathways open to them by enrolling at Community College of Denver.

This year's Summit is scheduled for Saturday, February 29 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., and includes exciting speakers and local business and community leaders.

Financial support is needed to cover the costs of this transformative program and to provide scholarships for attendees.

Last year's Black Male Summit was attended by approximately 100 high school students and their parents. Special guest speakers included Denver Mayor Michael B. Hancock, Brandon Marshall of Denver Bronco's fame, and Albus Brooks, then City Councilman. Every student who participated received a $500 scholarship to attend Community College of Denver after they graduate from high school.
